LEADERSHIP WORKSHOP

For General Counsel and Senior in-house counsel

with
Professor Scott WESTFAHL
Director of Harvard Law School
Executive Education

Corporate legal departments are the fastest growing segment of the legal profession, requiring general counsel to build the sophisticated leadership skills necessary to manage such growth.

Harvard Law School offers a Leadership in Corporate Counsel program for in-house leaders and gives them the frameworks, concepts and tools they need to succeed in their increasingly complicated roles.

Participants: Professor Scott WESTFAHL will give us insights of this exceptional program open to general counsel, chief legal officers and senior in-house counsel. To ensure a collegial, small group setting, class size is limited to 25 participants.

Objectives: The workshop is designed to sharpen the leadership skills of the participants by exploring topics such as understanding the challenges facing senior in-house counsel and strategies for dealing with role overload, subarctic survival simulation, nurturing an inclusive work environment, leading change and leadership in action.

The learning model: The workshop is based on case studies, lectures and small group discussions. Participants practice making decisions about challenging real-life management problems in professional service settings.
